"Night Lodging"
Seen Again at The Plymouth

Gilda Varesi Brings Excitement to Excellent Performance of Gorki's Profound Russian Life Study

By Heywood Brown
The revival of Gorki's "Night Lodging" at the Plymouth Theater last night proved more interesting than the original production. This may be because of the fact that the actress, Gilda Varesi, is a little more generous in lighting the first act, or the reviewer may have been profited by seeing the play a second time.

"Night Lodging" makes an unusual demand on the attention of the spectator. There is no steady sweep of dramatic current to which the play may intrust itself and wait. It is rather a series of eddies, very good eddies one might say if the purpose of the play is not so distinctly serious. There is no mechanical perfection of form. Gorki does not believe that life is cast into any such exact molds.

Bedtime Stories
That Queer Friendship Is Tested
By Thornton W. Burgess

The friendship that is true and best holds fast, whatever be the test. Farmer Brown's boy was feeling particularly happy, and when he feels that way he always whistles. He whistles for the same reason that birds sing. He just has to. Whenever you meet a whistling boy you will meet a happy boy. So, as Farmer Brown's boy tramped across the Green Meadows, he whistled. It was a whistling kind of a morning. It was so very beautiful that it was quite impossible to think of anybody as not being happy.

Suddenly Farmer Brown's boy caught sight of something black and white in the grass ahead of him. He stopped whistling. "Hello!" he exclaimed. "There's my friend Jimmy Skunk. He ought to be home and asleep by this time. I wonder what he is doing over here at this time of the day? He must have found so many fat beetles and white grubs that he couldn't take himself away from the feast."

He continued to walk toward Jimmy, for he was not afraid of Jimmy and kept his tail raised ready to shoot that little scent gun the instant Farmer Brown's boy came near enough. But some one else was getting to be a little suspicious. He was getting to be the best of friends and alone comes some one and makes you distrust the whole human race, which includes me. I don't blame you, Jimmy. I don't blame you a bit.

"But this isn't getting you out of your trouble. You can't get out alone, but some one else has got to get you. And I guess I'm that some one. It's funny how people who get themselves in trouble almost always have to have some one else get them out. Jimmy. It makes me nervous."

But Jimmy didn't put his tail down. He was angry, was through. You see he didn't understand. What Farmer Brown's boy was saying. So he continued to face Farmer Brown's boy

"Hello!" he exclaimed, "there's my friend Jimmy Skunk and kept his tail raised ready to shoot that little scent gun the instant Farmer Brown's boy came near enough. But some one else was getting to be a little suspicious. He was getting to be the best of friends and alone comes some one and makes you distrust the whole human race, which includes me. I don't blame you, Jimmy. I don't blame you a bit.

Beethoven Society Ends First Season In Noted Triumph

Chamber Music, Ideally
Played, Heard Under Best
Conditions; Sonata Composed for Prussian King

By H. E. Krehbiel

The Beethoven Association brought its first season to a close with a concert in Aeolian Hall last night. The success which has attended the six meetings has probably been a surprise to the members of the association.

At the outset it does not seem to have had any deeper purpose than to enable a few artists of first class ability and to forget the sordid conventions of their profession and perform music for the love of it. Beethoven's name, we believe, was chosen as one providing a rallying ground on which all musicians could meet, not because there was a belief on the part of the originators of the plan that there was need of propaganda for Beethoven's music.

Its Future Assured
The ideal of the enterprise and the delightful artistic fellowship which it illustrated seem to have made a peculiarly eloquent appeal to the lovers of chamber music, and quite unexpectedly the association finds itself so well established in popular favor as well as financially, its future activity seems assured. The name does not necessarily imply a restricted horizon.

A program of last night's concert embraced three complete sonatas, the piano trio in D major, Op. 70, No. 1; the sonata in G minor, for piano, violin and violoncello, and the quintet in F major, for two violins, viola, cello and double bass. The first of these was Harold Bauer, Fritz Kreisler and Wilhelm Willeke; in the sonata, Messrs. Bauer and Willeke; in the quintet, Messrs. Kreisler, Hans Letz, Sveenski, Eduard Kreiner and Willeke. Novelty did not enter into this scheme. The music was all familiar to the majority of the audience, but it is, though the violoncello sonata does not often figure on the programs of public concerts. It is the product of so interesting an episode in Beethoven's career that it is worth a special mention.

In 1796 Beethoven had been four years a resident of Vienna and fame and prosperity had come to him. He was admired, honored and sought by the musical aristocracy of the Austrian capital. He kept a valet and a horse. He also felt the lure of travel: he visited Prague and Berlin, passing through Dresden and Leipzig.

Snuffbox of Gold
He spent several weeks in Berlin and gave concerts at the court of Frederick William II of Prussia. This King was not only a music lover, he was also an amateur performer on the violin. In his musical ménage was Pierre Dupont, a violinist, brother of the more famous Jean Louis Dupont, creator of the modern violin technique. For him Beethoven composed two sonatas, one in F major, one in G minor, and with him he played the sonatas at a number of his private soirées. He considered the record which he received for it, a snuffbox filled with gold dust; not, as Beethoven was wont to explain, an ordinary snuffbox, but such a one as ambassadors received from royal hands.

When he published the sonatas he dedicated them to the Prussian monarch. More significant than the story of their origin is the fact that the sonatas were the first pieces of their kind for which a composer had written. All their predecessors were solo with figured bass accompaniment. Another incident of Beethoven's visit to Berlin was his association with Prince Louis Ferdinand, the King's nephew, whose musical talent Beethoven esteemed and estimated as much greater than that of Hummel, who was the leading musician of Berlin at the time. The prince Beethoven is reported to have said: "Your highness doesn't play in a royal or princely fashion, but like a sound pianist. Frederick William II was a nephew of Frederick the Great, the successor of that royal flautist and great-grandfather of the Hohenzollern now sojourning for his health in Holland."

Audience Breathless
The trio which opened the concert is that known in Germany as the "Geistertrio" because of the ghostly mood of its slow movement—a mood which was frequently pervasive in last night's performance that it was listened to with almost breathless attention. But so was all the music, for the players were so well bound together in an ideal unity of sympathy and understanding and the audience at one with them.

It was quite natural that this should be so, for the conditions were perfect for chamber music—a harmony of reverent love, unselfish capacity to interpret and to appreciate. The artists, true aristocrats in the hearers. The audience was more numerous than the auditorium proper could accommodate, but the requisitioned stage as well as all the chairs and boxes.

The Stage Door
"Breakfast in Bed" with Florence Moore in the stellar rôle, will conclude its engagement at the Eltinge Theater Saturday, April 24. On Monday, Saturday, April 26, Walter Hart will present at this theater a play by Laurence Eyre, author of "Miss Nelly of Orleans," entitled "Marianne," Josephine Victor will play the leading rôle.

"Susan Lenox," dramatized by George V. Hobart from the story by David Graham Phillips, will soon be staged by the Shuberts. It was given a trial last spring.

Mary Malleon, the English dramatic actress who was last seen on Broadway as Walker Whiteside's leading rôle in "The Little Boy," made her debut in "Scandal" last night at the Thirty-ninth Street Theater.

Fay Bainter will play the rôle of Galatea in the revival of "Pygmalion and Galatea," which will take place at the Knickerbocker Theater Sunday evening, April 25, for the benefit of the Vacation Association.

The first rehearsal of George White's "Scandal of 1891" will be held to-day at the grand ballroom of the Claridge Hotel.

Edith Ellis, co-author with Norman S. Ross of "Mrs. Jimmie Thompson," the comedy now playing at the Princess Theater, is shortly to have an early comedy of hers, "Leave It to Me," produced in London, with Norman Tharp in the stellar rôle.

William S. Hart in "The Toll Gate" will be the chief screen attraction at the Rivoli Theater next week.

The feature picture at the Rialto Theater will be "Paris Green," with Charles Fox.

Church Women to Open 100 'Saloons'; May Drive Planned

"Week of Thousand Teas"
Is Expected to Provide
Members and Funds to Carry Out Idea of League

One hundred "saloons" are to be opened by the Churchwomen's League for Patriotic Service, according to plans announced yesterday at the home of Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, at 451 Madison Avenue.

In order to get members and funds for this work a "Week of One Thousand Teas" will be held beginning May 1 in the homes of prominent members of the league. The meeting at Mrs. Reid's home was preliminary to this May drive, but $1,500 was collected. Ten thousand members are needed for the work.

The Rev. H. Percy Silver described the work of the model "saloon" which the league maintains at 243 East Thirty-fourth Street. The building is provided by Mrs. Reid, in a former mansion now occupied by one of the Astors, with spacious rooms easily turned into libraries, pool and billiard rooms, a bowling alley, shower baths and dance hall.

"Barkeep" a Friendly Fellow
Dr. Silver said that before prohibition went into effect he had spent much time investigating the saloons of this neighborhood to see what they really gave the men that was of permanent value, that would be incorporated into saloon substitutes. He found, he said, that the "barkeep," in many instances, was a good citizen and real friend to his patrons.

"There was one barkeep who was so genial and friendly and competent," he said, "that we made him a proposition to run our substitute saloon after the war. He refused. And the only reason he didn't get the job was that one night I caught him sliding the glasses of ginger ale under the counter for a swig of something that was not ginger ale."

I talked to a hat check boy in a hotel saloon soon after prohibition went into effect and learned that he made $100 a week. Not from checking hats, of course. He said he sold whisky to the hotel patrons at $25 a bottle that cost him $8.

Miss L. S. Day, secretary of the league, announced that the second of the "thousand teas" would be given very soon at Third Avenue, 235 Seventy-eighth Street, in a former corner saloon. There are thirty-five galleries in the neighborhood, she said, and much demand among the chauffeurs for a "club."

The Rev. Charles L. Slattery, rector of Grace Church, described the work of the Grace Church Club among former patrons of saloons. He advocated the establishment of clubs for working men on every block by the city government.

Bishop Hurch, who presided over the meeting, said many evils had followed the abolishing of the saloon and that hospitals and institutions were filled with the victims of the desire for liquor who had sought solace in drugs.

Stout Book Sale Ends
Total Paid for Notable Oriental Library Is $3,608

The sale of books, including the Oriental library of Dr. Arthur Purdy Stout, of this city, was concluded yesterday afternoon at the Anderson Galleries, Park Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street. The high price for the day was $200, paid by M. Wolf for the earliest edition of the "Novus Orbis," containing the voyages of Cadamosto; the three voyages of Columbus, Nino, Pinzon, Vesputius, Cabral and part of the Fourth Decade of Peter Martyr. This work is extremely rare, as it contains the map by Sebastian Munster.

C. W. Gordon paid $250 for an edition of Ptolemy edited by Michael Servetus, and it is valuable for its association with the execution of the editor in 1553. Mr. C. Harper bought an edition of Richard Eden's "The History of Trauauely in the West and East Indies" for $175.

The total for yesterday's sale was $1,732.95. The total for the entire sale was $3,608.50.
